Women on the Move: the journeyscapes of domestic violence

What about the men?

Briefing Paper 2

June 2018

Key points:

- Data from services provides evidence on women's and men's needs
- Where domestic violence is the issue, men are a tiny minority
- Men and women are equally likely to self-refer
- Men are less likely to have children with them
- Men are less likely to relocate to services

Data in this briefing from Supporting People Programme of housingrelated support services.

Department for Communities and Local Government and University of St Andrews, Centre for Housing Research (2012) Supporting People Client Records and Outcomes, 2003/04-2010/11: Special Licence Access [computer file]. Colchester, Essex, UK Data Archive [distributor]. Available from: <http:// dx.doi.org/10.5255/ UKDA-SN-7020-1>

Men experiencing domestic violence

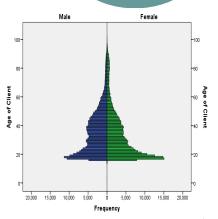

Men seek support on a wide range of issues at an equal rate to women—see the age pyramid of accessing services (right).

But, where domestic violence is the issue, men are a tiny minority—see the age pyramid (below right).

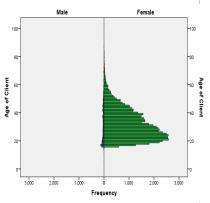

Men make up 3.1% of those at risk of domestic violence, and only 1.7% where risk of domestic violence is the primary need.

Men and women are equally likely to self-refer

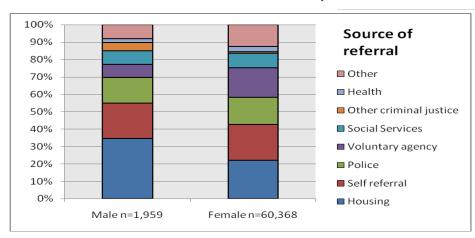

Men are equally likely as women to self-refer to services but more likely than women to be referred by statutory agencies such as Housing and Criminal Justice. In contrast, women are more likely to be referred by voluntary agencies—see graph (below).

Accessing services 2009-11 all needs n=470.533

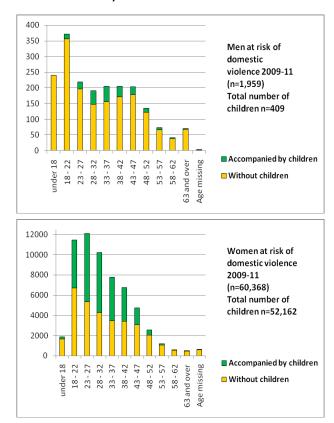

Accessing services 2009-11—
risk of domestic violence as a factor
n=61,696

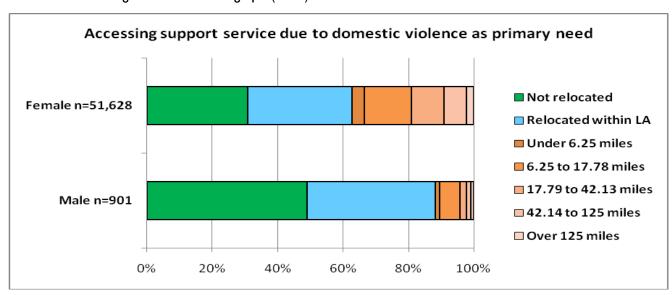

Men are less likely to have children with them

Just under half (46%) of women going to services have children with them, whereas only 10% of men have children with them.

Men are less likely to relocate to services

Men are more likely to access services without relocating or in their local authority, whereas women are more likely to relocate and travel longer distances—see graph (below).

The focus on domestic violence journeys is therefore a focus on women's—and children's—journeys.